“Be doers of the word and not hearers only...”

JAMES 1:22

It’s easy to understand the definition of stewardship – living a grateful and generous life. The hard part is doing it! How do your words and actions reflect God’s word? Do you share your time in prayer with God daily? Do you use your talent to help those in need without expecting anything in return? Are you generous with your financial resources? If not, what are you waiting for?

Pastor’s Letter

Dear Friends,

Each year, the bishops of the United States offer a statement on Labor Day encouraging support of workers and protection of their rights. Here is this year’s statement:

This Labor Day, let us recommit ourselves to building together a society that honors the human dignity of all who labor. Through the treasure of Catholic social teaching, we have a long history of proclaiming the essential role labor plays in helping people to live out their human dignity.

Our Catholic faith calls us to pray, work, and advocate for protections that allow all laborers to thrive—both those newly arrived in our country and those whose families have been here for generations. We believe in the dignity of work precisely because each of our brothers and sisters is a beloved child of God, made in his own image and likeness, and imbued with inherent dignity. Throughout Scripture, we see time and again how God shows us we must care for those who are vulnerable and honor the sacredness of everyone—no matter his or her circumstances in life. In Matthew’s Gospel, we read the parable of the workers in the vineyard as an example of the Father’s overflowing love for each of his children. In that parable, the master pays all the workers a “just” wage despite working for differing lengths of time. Their remuneration is given simply because he desires that we all have the resources to thrive. Dignified work reflects that our humanity gives us an active role to play in cultivating the world around us. Through work, we exercise dominion over how we provide the material needs for ourselves and our families. God desires for us to do more than simply survive but to thrive.

Yet, in today’s economy, too many people and families are living in poverty due to jobs with low pay that often provide little or no benefits, erratic work schedules, and offer insufficient protections. At the same time, union representation has diminished, especially in the private sector, leaving workers with less protection and a weakened bargaining position. We know it does not have to be this way.

Many communities and sectors of the economy are grappling with labor shortages due to changing demographics and other factors, with some looking to immigrants to fill the gaps. Pope Benedict XVI pointed out, following his predecessors and consistently confirmed by research, that immigrants boost innovation and overall economic output. In the U.S., immigrants’ contributions have a net positive impact on the federal deficit. Despite these economic benefits, the progress we have made as a society toward safer, more just working conditions, and the Church’s essential and consistent teaching, we often see immigrant laborers mistreated at a higher rate than their native-born counterparts, including through the evil of human trafficking. Additionally, immigrants face outright hostility and discrimination due in part to misconceptions and harmful political rhetoric dismissive of the human person.

For decades, the Church has advocated for changes to the immigration system, recognizing that it does not adequately address the needs of American families, employers, communities, or immigrants. These shortcomings, when coupled with the issue of labor shortages, have increased opportunities for the exploitation of immigrants and led some to resort to using children as a supplemental source of labor.

This Labor Day, may we recognize all the laborers in the Lord’s vineyard and embrace them for who they truly are—our brothers and sisters: “So you too should love the resident alien, for that is what you were in the land of Egypt.” Let us strive without ceasing to protect the sacredness of human life and together build a society that respects and uplifts each person’s human dignity.

May we listen well to the bishops and heed their call to work for everyone’s dignity.

Peace,

Fr. Damian
