More than the money...

Imagine the weight of losing your job, raising three kids, and facing a utility shut-off notice. That was the reality for a young father we visited recently. When we told him his bill would be paid in full, you could literally see the burden lift. He fought back tears of relief in front of his children.

Before we left, we prayed with him. With a completely renewed sense of hope, he told his young daughter he had a "good feeling" about his two job interviews the next day.

Financial relief isn't just about paying a bill. It restores hope and confidence right when a family needs it most. Thank you to everyone who supports our mission and makes these moments possible.

Please keep this dad in your thoughts and prayers for his interviews!

Thank You for your support!

Pastor's Letter

Dear Friends,

After the first two chapters of his encyclical, Magnifica Humanitas, where Pope Leo reviews the Social Doctrine of the Catholic Church, he begins the core of this letter – the new challenge of Artificial Intelligence.

The first question you and others may have for Pope Leo is – why does this matter to the Pope and why should it matter to everyday Christians? Pope Leo responds by talking about the power of technology and the danger of such power. Here is a little bit of his reasoning:

In our globalized world the tendency is to let the logic of efficiency, control and profit alone shape personal, social and economic decisions. This makes it clear that technology is not simply a tool. When it becomes the standard by which everything is judged, it begins to dictate what matters and what can be discarded, reducing creation to an object of exploitation and human beings to mere cogs in a system driven toward ever greater efficiency.

This paradigm has spread rapidly in recent years, fueled in part by the expansion of artificial intelligence, cognitive science, nanotechnology, robotics and biotechnology. In themselves, these innovations can greatly serve integral human development and the care of our common home. Yet precisely because of their power, they can also hasten the expansion of the technocratic paradigm and therefore require a new spiritual, ethical and political framework...

The danger of humanity becoming a victim of its own achievements was already clearly recognized by Saint Paul VI, who warned that "the most extraordinary scientific progress, the most astounding technical feats and the most amazing economic growth, unless accompanied by authentic moral and social progress, will in the long run go against man." For this reason, technological progress — valuable in itself — requires careful discernment of the anthropological vision that guides it and the ends it pursues. If technological development advances without a corresponding ethical and social progress, the result may be an increase in means without a growth in humanity: "having more" without "being more." In such a scenario, there is a risk that individuals will be evaluated principally according to the outcomes they produce...

In many cases within the digital context, control over platforms, infrastructure, data and computing power does not rest with States, but with major economic and technological actors. These entities effectively set the conditions for access, determine the rules of visibility and shape the very possibilities for participation. When such power is concentrated in the hands of a few, it tends to become opaque and evade public oversight, increasing the risk of distorted forms of development that give rise to new dependencies, exclusions, manipulations and inequalities.

Faced with this concentration of power in the digital world, the criteria for judgment and discernment in this new situation are the noble principles of Social Doctrine: the inalienable dignity of the human person, the common good, the universal destination of goods, subsidiarity, solidarity and social justice. They demand that we assess whether the power of digital infrastructures and algorithms truly fosters participation and responsibility, protects the vulnerable, ensures fair access to opportunities and remains directed toward the good of all.

Pope Leo then acknowledges that in this brief teaching he cannot give an extensive overview of artificial intelligence and all the places it is showing up. He chooses to limit himself to a few essential elements for moral discernment which will safeguard the dignity of the human person. More on that next week.

Peace,

Fr. Damian
